Overview of the Course

Many managers and organizations now recognize that a critical source of competitive advantage often comes not from having the most ingenious product design, the best marketing strategy, or the most state-of-the-art production technology, but rather from having an effective system for obtaining and managing the organization’s human assets. A number of developments, including firms’ shifts to knowledge workers, rapid technological change, increased global competition, tight labor markets in some sectors, and experiments with new organizational arrangements, are making the firm’s internal organizational strategy increasingly important for senior managers and for entrepreneurs. Some commentators contend that in today’s economy, with such open access to information, technology, capital, and other resources, adroit human resource management may be one of the few remaining sources of competitive advantage.

The course focuses on the implementation of policies that enable the organization to achieve competitive advantage through people. The specific topics covered are recruitment and selection, the challenges and opportunities in using individual and team-based incentives to motivate and reward employees, the use of non-monetary incentives, objective and subjective performance evaluation, investments in human capital, organizational structure, and people analytics.

The course relies heavily on cases and examines a large number of companies in a diverse group of industries, including the not-for-profit sector. We will examine the organizational strategy decisions made by these companies and draw lessons from their experiences that can be applied to other companies. Two guest speakers will attend the class.
Connection to the Core

This course builds on the concepts developed in Managerial Economics and Strategy Formulation.

Course Materials

In addition to cases, the course uses readings from the economics and business literature. All of these materials will be distributed in a readings/casebook on the first day of class. One of the cases is a negotiation simulation and one is a role play exercise.

Course Requirements and Assignments

A. Attendance and Participation (25%)

You are expected to attend all sessions and to actively participate in class discussions. Class participation is essential in order for you to get the maximum benefit from the course. Your grade will be based on attendance, effort and the content of your contributions to the class discussions. The evaluation of content will be based on the following:

- Relevance: Are your comments clearly related to the case and to the comments of others? Do they move the discussion forward?
- Fact-Based: Have you used specific data from the case, from readings, or from personal experience to support the assertions you are making?

If you feel that you are preparing well but that I am not calling on you enough, please let me know so that I can address the problem. While I will mainly rely on voluntary participation, I may also randomly call on students.

On February 1, a negotiation simulation will be conducted in class and attendance on that day is therefore essential. If you will not be able to attend class that day, please inform me and TA immediately.

On February 15, a role play exercise will be conducted in class and attendance on that day is therefore essential. If you will not be able to attend class that day, please inform me and TA immediately.
B. Case Write-ups (40%)

There are two written INDIVIDUAL assignments that require you to analyze a case and answer a specific set of questions. To satisfy this requirement, select two of the four cases scheduled for Classes 3, 7, 9 and 11 and answer the questions shown under Preparation Questions on pages 8 and 9 of the syllabus. The assignment is due at 9 pm the evening before the class on which the case will be discussed. All assignments must be in 12 point font, double-spaced, and cannot exceed three pages. Late assignments will incur a penalty. Each of these INDIVIDUAL assignments count for 20% of your final grade.

C. Final Paper and Presentation (35%)

The final project is an opportunity for you to apply the knowledge from this course to a specific company with which you are familiar. You should work in groups of four or five people, with at least one person in the group having worked for that company or having access to “inside” information. Other sources are private equity and venture capital firms which are interested in having MBAs review companies they own or are considering as an investment. It is preferable to choose a small to midsize company. Each group will make a very brief presentation on the last day of class. The final paper is due on March 7th at 1 pm. The paper should describe the company’s organizational strategy and critically analyze the strengths and weaknesses of that strategy. Analysis, rather than description, is the focus of the paper. Recommendations for changes to the company’s organizational strategy should be grounded in thoughtful analysis that reflects your understanding of the concepts discussed in the course. Recommended length for the paper is 10 double-spaced pages, not including exhibits.

D. Classroom Conduct

This class will adhere to the Columbia Business School Honor Code and The Columbia Business School Core Culture (“Present”, “Prepared”, “Participating”). You are expected to arrive to class on time. Keep your name card visible during class sessions. Laptops, cell phones, and other electronic devices are NOT to be used in class. Failure to comply with this rule will impact your class participation grade.
